The frequency of social contact may affect the psychological well-being of group members. This frequency may be affected by the social structure of the group. For example, in a group with a high degree of social contact, members may be more likely to experience social support and social reinforcement, which may lead to higher levels of psychological well-being. Conversely, in a group with a low degree of social contact, members may be more likely to experience social isolation and social rejection, which may lead to lower levels of psychological well-being.

3. RESEARCHER'S INTERESTS – Individuals studying social systems may have different interests in social behavior. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 4. RESEARCH PURPOSES – The purpose (What is being studied and why?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 5. RESEARCH DESIGN – The design (How is the study conducted?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 6. RESEARCH METHODS – The methods (What tools and techniques are used?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 7. RESEARCH RESULTS – The results (What are the findings?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 8. RESEARCH CONCLUSIONS – The conclusions (What are the implications?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 9. RESEARCH APPLICATIONS – The applications (How are the findings used?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 10. RESEARCH ETHICS – The ethics (What are the moral principles?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 11. RESEARCH LIMITATIONS – The limitations (What are the constraints?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.
 12. RESEARCH FUTURE DIRECTIONS – The future directions (What are the next steps?) of the study may be different. The application of the social system concept may be different.

These assumptions are provided in a call to the CASYS system module's `initialize` method. Note that the "NDC" flag provides a guideline for proper processing, and is particularly useful when the entire ground sheet for a case is to be processed. In such cases, the "NDC" flag should be set to "true".
