The International Journal of Surgery ,1899 The Operations of Surgery (Jacobson) Walter

Hamilton Acland Jacobson,Philip Turner,R. P. Rowlands,1915 Surgery of the Lung Carl Garre,2015-06-16 Excerpt from Surgery of the Lung The bony thorax is composed of the dorsal vertebrse the twelve pairs of ribs and the sternum The dorsal vertebrse form as it were a slightly movable staff The sternum consisting of the manubrium gladiolus and ensiform process has in its lower section a slight convex curve to the front when there is a sternal angle angulus Ludovici between the manubrium and gladiolus the arch is more pronounced At this spot which is easily palpable the 2nd rib is inserted The upper margin of the manubrium is opposite the 2nd and 3rd dorsal vertebrae The sternum has a thin cortical layer which encloses a loose spongiosa with bone marrow rich in blood It is worthy of note that the flexible connection between manubrium and gladiolus the region of the sternal angle becomes ossified in old age it must also be noticed that the gladiolus is composed of several individual parts and that frequently holes defects in ossification occur especially in the lower section of the gladiolus Only the seven upper ribs are attached to the sternum The 8th to the 10th ribs are connected at the anterior end with the cartilage of the 7th The 11th and 12th ribs are free Not infrequently the cartilage of the 8th rib reaches the sternum The two first and two last ribs tend in their whole length to incline downwards from the back to the front The others at first follow the same course but before their insertion in the sternum or in the cartilage of the 7th rib they turn upwards in such a way that the lowest point of the 7th rib is in the nipple line whilst that of the ribs above it is more mesially that of those below is more laterally placed Tillaux has ascertained by sagittal sections of the thorax in the nipple line that the 1 st rib corresponds anteriorly in the horizontal plane with the 4th rib posteriorly For the time being the 2nd to the 7th ribs in front correspond with the 6th to the 11th ribs behind in the scapular line The knowledge of this simple fact should make the comprehension of X ray photographs easier The mechanism of the thorax will be treated of in the chapter on Emphysema As anomalies of the ribs may be mentioned fissures at the anterior end The rib may end by means of two cartilages in the breast bone or if the bifurcation ends before this insertion in the sternum roundish or oval holes may arise generally situated at the border of the bony cartilage Of the supernumerary ribs the cervical ribs have a certain practical importance If the subclavian artery with the brachial plexus passes over a cervical rib then this is also reached by the dome of the pleura which is not now hindered from rising so high Merkel Text book of Topographical Anatomy vol i p 326 The cortical substance of the ribs is firmer and the medullary spaces are smaller than those of the sternum the powerful periosteum is in contrast with the outer side very firmly attached to the inner surface of the ribs The breadth of the intercostal space is the greatest in the three first especially at the border of the bony cartilage About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
