This book responds to ongoing calls for clarification and consensus regarding the meaning scope and interplay of humanitarian law and human rights law in the grey zones of unconventional operational environments such as counterterrorism and counterinsurgency operations It contributes to the debate in this area by developing objective criteria for determining where the shift from the legal framework of law enforcement to that of non international armed conflict occurs in relation to targeting law and weaponry law by developing improved objective criteria for determining what constitutes direct participation in hostilities and de facto membership in an organised armed group by taking stock of how existing targeting and weaponry rules are being applied to unconventional conflicts within civilian populated areas by key state players as well as by international and regional human rights mechanisms by arguing for the progressive realisation of targeting and weaponry law so that they are more fitting for operational environments that are increasingly urbanised and civilianised by seeking to understand how global networked connectivity may affect our understanding of the operational theatre of war and the geographical reach of the legal framework of non international armed conflict Report of the Royal Commission Appointed to Inquire Into the Water Supply of the Metropolis: Minutes of evidence Great Britain.
