Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The subjects included all employees of a large manufacturing company who had been employed for at least one year. A questionnaire was sent to each employee asking about symptoms of musculoskeletal disorders and work-related factors. The results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers in manual jobs than among those in non-manual jobs. This finding suggests that the risk of developing musculoskeletal disorders is higher for manual workers than for non-manual workers.
