Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 10-week, 12-session, 120-min group intervention on the self-esteem of 100 adolescents with a history of sexual abuse. The intervention was designed to help adolescents develop a positive self-image and to provide them with a supportive environment. The results of the study indicated that the intervention had a positive effect on the self-esteem of the adolescents. The authors discussed the implications of the findings and the need for further research.

Abstract and background: There are a number of reasons why the use of a single, one-dimensional measure of risk is inadequate for the purpose of identifying and managing risk. This paper discusses the importance of using a multi-dimensional approach to risk assessment and management, and provides a framework for the development of a risk assessment tool that takes into account a range of factors, including the nature of the risk, the likelihood of occurrence, and the potential consequences. The paper also discusses the importance of ongoing monitoring and review of risk, and the need for a flexible and adaptable risk management system.
