Sources Of Coherence In Reading:

Sources of Coherence in Reading Robert Frederick Lorch, Edward J. O'Brien, 1995-01 During the last 20 years there has been an enormous amount of research examining sources of coherence in reading. A major tenet of this work has been the distinction between two major sources of coherence. Text based sources of coherence are contained within the text itself: use of headings to indicate aspects of a text's macrostructure; reader based sources of coherence encompass the information and strategies that the reader brings to the comprehension process. Many early models of reading comprehension emphasized text based sources of coherence as a way of understanding how a representation of the text is constructed in memory. However, during the last decade there has been a clear shift of theoretical perspective away from viewing reading comprehension as a process of representing a text to viewing comprehension as a process of representing what a text is about. This has led to a greater emphasis on reader based sources of coherence. The purpose of this book is to bring together the large body of evidence addressing the roles of text based and reader based sources of coherence in reading comprehension. The contributors present the current state of cognitive theory and research on comprehension of discourse.

When we speak of a text we speak of Any passage spoken or written of whatever length that forms a unified whole. The question that is put first is what is a text and what is not? What are the features that distinguish text from a collection of unrelated sentences? Halliday points out that every text has a texture. A text derives this texture from the fact that it functions as a unity with respect to its environment. There are certain linguistic features that contribute to textual unity. Apart from other concepts this fact is described by the concept of cohesion. The concept of cohesion is a semantic one; it refers to relations of meaning that exist within the text and that define it as a text. Cohesion occurs where the interpretation of some element in the discourse is dependent on that of another. Formulated in other words, cohesion implies semantic resources for linking a sentence with what has gone before. The aim of this paper is to give a survey of the textual phenomenon cohesion by describing it with the help of an article of a newspaper. By analysing this article the paper pays attention to the linguistic resources of cohesion which are reference, ellipsis and conjunction to point out how the resources help to create text to organize text and experience the interpersonal and the experiential coherence of the text. Text Connexity, Text Coherence Emel Sözer, 1985 Multidisciplinary Perspectives on Literacy Research, 1992 Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research Society for Psychical Research (Great
