Taking the Land to Make the City Mary P. Ryan, 2019-03-15 The history of the United States is often told as a movement westward beginning at the Atlantic coast and following farmers across the continent But cities played an equally important role in the country s formation Towns sprung up along the Pacific as well as the Atlantic as Spaniards and Englishmen took Indian land and converted it into private property In this reworking of early American history Mary P Ryan shows how cities specifically San Francisco and Baltimore were essential parties to the creation of the Republics of the United States and Mexico Baltimore and San Francisco share common roots as early trading centers whose coastal locations immersed them in an international circulation of goods and ideas Ryan traces their beginnings back to the first human habitation of each area showing how the juggernaut toward capitalism and nation building could not commence until Europeans had taken the land for city building She then recounts how Mexican ayuntamientos and Anglo American city councils pioneered a prescient form of municipal sovereignty that served as both a crucible for democracy and a handmaid of capitalism Moving into the nineteenth century Ryan shows how the citizens of Baltimore and San Francisco molded landscape forms associated with the modern city the gridded downtown rudimentary streetcar suburbs and outlying great parks This history culminates in the era of the Civil War when the economic engines of cities helped forged the East and the in the Mexican army bequeathed his name to the crescent shaped basin once known as Castro's Valley. Driven to ruin by squatters, drought, and gambling debts, he sold a portion of his cattle ranch to Methodist minister Zachariah Hughes, who built a church and school in what is now Crow Canyon. The one room redwood school Hughes christened Eden Vale educated about 50 children until a group from the burgeoning town to the south, Hayward's, stole it by wagon in the dead of night. Undaunted, Castro Valley delineated from its now friendly neighbors by hills, Lake Chabot, and an independent spirit, built and fully supported its own Redwood School. It has now developed into one of the most populous unincorporated areas in the United States.

Native American Tribal Histories James Treat, 1995 Agroecology in the High School Donald J. Hartley, 1993 News & Views - Dept. of Parks and Recreation California. Department of Parks and Recreation, 1989 A Passage for Dissent Noel Peattie, 1989 News and Views California. Department of Parks and Recreation, 1989 The Coevolution Quarterly, 1981 Stanford, 1998 Terrain, 1999 People's Park, Still Blooming Terri Compost, 2009

People's Park in Berkeley was born when a diverse coalition of activists seized a vacant lot to build a park in 1969. The authorities reacted violently, leading to riots in which police shot into crowds, killing one bystander and wounding over 100 people. The battle over People's Park became a symbol for the battles of the 1960s between the counter culture and mainstream society. While the dramatic story of the Park's violent creation in 1969 has been thoroughly told, no book until now has brought the story up to date. This book illustrates how the Park is still a living counter cultural experiment and a model for do it yourself ecological and social direct action. The book features hundreds of historical images and photographs of the Park's present uses as a community garden and native plant repository as a liberated zone for concerts and political rallies and as one of the few places open to all people, rich and poor, homeless and housed, in an increasingly consumer dominated Berkeley. The book uses interviews, news clippings, political tracts, and primary documents to show how generations of activists have fought to allow the users of the Park to control its development, operation, and maintenance, embodying the principal of user development in the face of constant police repression.
