

Documentary Research Strategy to Research Canada

Documentary Research: Ethnographic ethnography	1. Research aims Documentary Research aims to explore and understand the experiences of individuals and groups in a particular social context. This is achieved through the collection and analysis of documents, which are defined as any written or recorded material that provides information about a particular topic or issue. This can include a wide range of materials, from official records and government documents to personal letters and diaries. The aim of Documentary Research is to use these documents to gain a deeper understanding of the social and cultural context in which they were produced and to explore the ways in which they have been used and interpreted over time. 2. Research design Documentary Research is a qualitative research method that involves the collection and analysis of documents. The design of the research is determined by the research aims and the types of documents that are available. This can involve a range of techniques, from searching archives and libraries to using online databases and digital archives. The design also involves the selection of the documents to be analysed, which is often done through a process of purposive sampling. This means that the researcher selects documents that are likely to provide the most relevant and interesting information for their research. 3. Data collection The data collection process in Documentary Research involves the identification and location of documents that are relevant to the research. This can be done through a variety of methods, including searching archives, libraries, and online databases. It can also involve contacting individuals or organisations that may have access to relevant documents. Once the documents have been located, the researcher will need to obtain them, which may involve borrowing them from a library or archive, or purchasing them from a private collector. The researcher will then need to transcribe or digitise the documents, depending on the format in which they are available. 4. Data analysis The data analysis process in Documentary Research involves the examination and interpretation of the documents that have been collected. This is often done through a process of thematic analysis, in which the researcher identifies themes or patterns in the data. This can involve coding the documents, so that they can be grouped together based on their content. The researcher will then need to interpret the data, which involves making sense of the themes and patterns that have been identified. This can be done through a variety of methods, including writing a narrative account of the data, or using statistical methods to analyse the data. 5. Research findings The research findings in Documentary Research are the results of the data analysis process. These findings are often presented in the form of a narrative account of the data, or as a series of themes or patterns that have been identified. The findings can be used to explore the social and cultural context in which the documents were produced, and to explore the ways in which they have been used and interpreted over time. The findings can also be used to explore the experiences of individuals and groups in a particular social context, and to explore the ways in which these experiences have been shaped by the social and cultural context.
