

Chapter I

INTRODUCTION

Rationale

The rationale renders an exposition of the situation that has made the study necessary. The first paragraph of the introduction is the most important part of the paper. It provides a "narrative hook" to the reader (Creswell, 2007). The Narrative Hook causes the reader to pay attention and elicits an emotional or attitudinal response from the reader. It also causes the reader to continue reading.

The next paragraphs are readings to support the first paragraph.

The rationale main purpose is to present the justification of the study. The researchers may cite the problematic situation, which prompted the researchers to conduct the study from the macro to micro levels, that is, globally, regionally, nationally, and locally, to zero-in on the local setting of the study. Discussions claimed should be with legal basis relevant to the study. The researchers may present pertinent statistical data that could support the claims. The presentations should be emphatic and explosive. It should create an impact on the reader of the research. It should prod the reader to go on and find out what good is there in the research study.

The last paragraph of the rationale is the purpose statement. It states the purpose of the researcher in order to address the gap or problem stated in the situationer and cite the reasons for conducting the study.

The rationale should be two to four pages only.
