ABSTRACT

This paper explores the potential effects of social media usage on students' academic performance. While social media provides a platform for communication and information sharing, excessive use may interfere with study habits, attention span, and overall productivity. The purpose of this paper is to examine both positive and negative impacts of social media on learning outcomes. Key findings suggest that moderate, purposeful use of social media may enhance collaboration and information access, whereas excessive engagement is linked to lower academic performance. The implications of these findings for students, educators, and policymakers are discussed.

Keywords: social media, academic performance, students, learning outcomes

INTRODUCTION

Social media has become an integral part of modern life, particularly among students. Platforms such as Facebook, Instagram, and TikTok offer opportunities for networking, information sharing, and entertainment. However,
