European businesses even smaller companies will need to be aware of the impact of EU integration This publication reports on a survey carried out in seven EU countries among a sample of small firms from various manufacturing industries It considers the key skills needs by small businesses to compete in the European single market and an increasingly globalised world economy as well as looking at possible policy initiatives which can contribute to an improved trading position Findings include that export and cross border activities form the first step towards internationalisation and that in most cases it constitutes natural business growth or even survival Only seldom is it the result of a long term strategy     The Lancet ,1941
