View England, Japan, and France through their movie stories

Nomadsirius,2024-07-31 Prologue Romanticism despaired over the destructive and dark aspects of reason that became evident after the French Revolution of 1789 When radical and cruel reason shattered and collapsed all principles and orders it bred a deep distrust and skepticism toward reason Amid the ruins of the mind Romanticism turned inward seeking individuality and emotion based on self confirmation and human instinctive desires While Romanticism clearly emerged as a reaction against Enlightenment and Neoclassicism it neither ignored nor rejected reason Instead it viewed absolute and universal reason as something that evolves with historical flow perceiving society as an organism undergoing birth growth decline and extinction Just as Romanticism rebelled against the norms of the Age of Reason scientific rationalism and the Industrial Revolution Realism opposed the exaggerated emotionalism and subjectivism of Romanticism Focusing on the unpleasant and ugly realities revealed by the February Revolution of 1848 Realism aimed to objectify the lives of the middle and lower classes It posited that uncomfortable truths are inherent in human conceptual systems and linguistic practices Realism concerned itself with how things appear in order to view unidealized subjects and events Thus it attempted to depict and faithfully express facts existing in third person objective reality according to secular and empirical rules without embellishment or interpretation This book approaches 15 films from the UK Japan and France through the intersection of emotion and thought It contemplates the universal human emotions and experiences contained within the precarious spectacles of these three nations histories By breaking free from prescribed emotional lines and the uncomfortable framework of fixed thought this book reads the UK Japan and France through their cinematic narratives Even when the film ends it remains an unsettling stimulus with an unknown conclusion    Forbidden Fruit Christiane Inmann,2009 Throughout the ages from Sappho to Mary Wollstonecraft extraordinary women have exposed other women to the world of letters and the freedom it brings This unique cross cultural account highlights the accomplishments of women writers and educated women and provides beautiful reproductions of renowned artworks that illustrate their achievements and the worlds they inhabited thereby also tracing the social functions of the portraits of reading women as well as the types of books they read The book further explores the changing circumstances of women s access to literature and education throughout the centuries in different cultures and societies Chronologically arranged the volume opens in ancient times exploring civilizations as diverse as Mesopotamia Greece and China It travels to the Middle Ages and Renaissance Europe to modern England and America Along the way readers are treated to profiles of Ban Zhao Murasaki Shikibu Christine de Pisan Jane Austen the Bront sisters Phillis Wheatley and Harriet Beecher Stowe among many others Artworks featuring reading women range from Pompeii frescoes to important works by artists through the centuries including Hans Holbein Thomas Gainsborough Thomas Eakins Winslow Homer Gustav Klimt Edvard Munch Roy Lichtenstein Balthus and Gerhard Richter The result is a beautifully illustrated cultural history of women reading as fascinating and inspiring as the accomplishments it honours    The Tale of Genji John T.
