

Uses of impersonality of TS Eliots poetry

- Eliot (1976) says "Poetry is not a turning loose of emotion, but an escape from emotion; it is not the expression of personality, but an escape from personality. But, of course, only those who have personality and emotions know what it means to want to escape from these things." Eliot criticizes the romantic poets for being engrossed in subjectivity in their poems. As a matter of fact, Eliot could not escape being completely impersonal in his poetry, though he emphasizes the importance of impersonality in poetry. Ellmann (1987) argues that T. S. Eliot and Ezra Pound advocate impersonality, but they often smuggle their personality back into their poetics. He adds that Eliot insists that poetry originates in personal emotion and that the poet's subjectivity pervades the text.
- The notion of the several Eliots includes the argument that he is of two minds about impersonality in art. In "Tradition and the Individual Talent" and other early essays, he argues that the greatest art is impersonal. In the same essays, sometimes in the same sentence, he maintains that the greatest art is personal. "Poetry is not . . . the expression of personality, but an escape from personality. But of course, only those who have personality . . . know what it means to want to escape" (Eliot 1950: 10-11). The perception that Eliot's concept of impersonality seemed contradictory began early, with reviews of The Sacred Wood (1920). In March 1921, for example, Conrad Aiken outlined the ostensible contradiction between the statements about "impersonality" in "Tradition and the Individual Talent" and those in "Massinger" (Aiken 1921). The charge of inconsistency was not mitigated by Eliot's comments on The Waste Land, which he variously described as impersonal and as "the relief of a personal and wholly insignificant grouse against life" (Eliot 1971: 1)
