

Objectivity: An Introduction

Students demonstrate an ability to describe an experience after reading historic documents simply from the documents without specifying or putting the experience in a context. The lack of contextualization often is a major obstacle to understanding the primary documents' contextualized sources. The typical contextualized source being analyzed is a primary source that gives an account of the events that occurred in the past, whether written or spoken. Students are often taught to identify the source, describe the source, and then to analyze the source. This is a good practice, but it is not enough. Students are often taught to identify the source, describe the source, and then to analyze the source. This is a good practice, but it is not enough. Students are often taught to identify the source, describe the source, and then to analyze the source. This is a good practice, but it is not enough.

The next objective of the lesson is to describe the source, whether it is a primary source or a secondary source. This is done by describing the source and then by describing the source.
