The Foreign Office and Finland, 1938-1940 Craig Gerrard, 2005 The book looks at the ways in which the Northern Department of the Foreign Office approached matters pertaining to Finland in the years 1938 1940 concentrating on the particular issues of the proposed rearmament of the land Islands Finnish rearmament and aid to Finland during the Winter War with the Soviet Union At the beginning of this period the Northern Department officials aimed at giving support to Finland while at the same time attempting to create an environment where Finland and the Soviet Union could reach agreement thus keeping Finland out of the German sphere of influence Their belief that the security interests of the USSR must be considered when dealing with Finland changed after the Soviet invasion of Finland at the end of November 1939 From this point on the ability of the Northern Department officials to influence policy towards Finland declined as the Cabinet became more interested in the situation Nevertheless Laurence Collier the head of the department and his associates continued to recommend particular forms of action and their ideas were frequently at odds with what was being decided by government Their recommendations for military intervention debate in contemporary international relations concerning the relationship between statist obligations to one's own political community and cosmopolitan duties to distant others. This volume contributes to this debate by investigating aspects of the ethics of national military and security and intelligence policies in the post 9/11 environment. The discursive transformation of national militaries into forces for good became normalized as the Cold War subsided. While the number of humanitarian military interventions and operations rose considerably in the immediate post-Cold War period, the advent of the war on terror raised questions about exactly what we mean by ethical behaviour in terms of military and security policies. This volume interrogates this key question via a focus that is both distinctive and illuminating on national military ethics, femininities, masculinities and difference and intelligence ethics. The key objectives are to demonstrate the important linkages between areas of international relations that are all too often treated in isolation from one another and to investigate the growing tension between cosmopolitan and communitarian conceptions of intelligence and security and the use of armed force. This book will be of much interest to students of security studies, ethics, gender studies, intelligence studies and international relations in general. Mark Phythian is Professor of Politics in the Department of Politics and International Relations at the University of Leicester. He is the author or editor/co-editor of ten books. Annika Bergman Rosamond is Senior Researcher at the Danish Institute for International Studies in Copenhagen.

Ethics, Technology and the American Way of War Reuben E. Brigety II, 2007-06-11. A new investigation into how the advent of precision-guided munitions affects the likelihood of US policy makers to use force. As such, this is an inquiry into the impact of ethics, strategy and military technology on the decision calculus of national leaders. Following the first Gulf War in 1991, this new study shows how US Presidents increasingly used stand-off precision-guided munitions or PGMs, especially the Tomahawk cruise missile, either to influence foreign adversaries to make specific policy choices or to signal displeasure with their actions. Such uses of force are attractive because they can lead to desirable policy outcomes where conventional diplomacy has failed but without the large cost of lives, economic resources or political capital that result from large-scale military operations. In a post-9/11 world, understanding alternative uses of force under significant policy constraints is still of supreme importance.

Bibliographic Index, 2010 Deterring International Terrorism and Rogue States James H. Lebovic, 2007 This new study challenges the widely held view that many current US adversaries cannot be deterred maintaining that deterrence is not a relic of the Cold War period and that it should shape US policies toward so called rogue states and terror groups James Lebovic argues that deterrence principles continue to apply and focuses upon the three pillars of the Bush administration s national security policy missile defence which preoccupied the administration until September 11 2001 preemption which became the US focus with the September 11 attacks and US success in overthrowing the Taliban regime in Afghanistan homeland security which the administration has portrayed as more a natural response to threat than an aspect of policy that must be reconciled with the other pillars Deterring International Terrorism and Rogue States asserts that bad offences and defences have been endemic to the current US policy approach leading US policy makers to pursue policies that require them to do everything without adequate concern for resource trade offs overreach and unintended consequences This book will be of great interest to students of US foreign policy national and international security terrorism and international relations in general
