Bad Feet— Bad Spine

By
Dr. Morris Wax
Chiropractor

If, upon examination of the adult spine, it were possible to go back in time and examine the child's feet of the adult, you would undoubtedly agree with my theory, "Backache of today is the uncorrected foot strain of yesteryear." Mannell states: "One good recent example is that of a patient with a short tendo-achilles, who for four years had been unable to walk up or down stairs in comfort in spite of the fact his main job in life was standing. Alterations of his foot-gear at once enabled him to go up and downstairs with a freedom that he had not known for year." . . . Not in every case is the alteration of the shoe sufficient. Chiropractic manipulation and postural balance are the methods of choice for spinal curves, especially scoliosis. This is a childhood one-sided twist of the spine, primarily due to foot pronation. In many cases, however, impinged spinal nerves due to bony disarrangement from simple everyday use of the body requires the careful adjustive technic of your chiropractor.
