OpenStreetMap is a free, open-source, and collaborative project that aims to create a high-quality map of the world. The project is based on the OpenStreetMap data model, which is a standard for representing geographical data. The data is collected by volunteers using various methods, including GPS devices, mobile phones, and web-based tools. The data is then processed and stored in a central database, which is available for anyone to use and contribute to. The data is licensed under the OpenStreetMap License, which is a Creative Commons Attribution-ShareAlike license. The project is run by a non-profit organization called OpenStreetMap Foundation, which is based in the United States. The project has a large community of contributors from around the world, and it is used by millions of people for navigation, mapping, and other applications. The project is also used by governments, NGOs, and other organizations for various purposes, such as disaster relief, urban planning, and environmental monitoring. The project is a great example of how open-source and collaborative projects can be used to create valuable resources for the public.
