

LANGUAGE CONSCIOUSNESS AS THE PECULIARITY OF CULTURAL DIFFERENCES

Different words can create various contextual considerations because language forms our thoughts, the nature of our communicational choices, and the relations, identity, and evaluative outcomes of this choice. From the twentieth century language came to be regarded as an "intermediate world" between thought and reality, individual consciousness and culture, a world in which an unstructured stream of impressions and unrelated messages got a conceptual form. The culture of the North Caucasus is not only a spatio-temporal boundaries of existence of separate ethnic groups living in this territory, but also reflects the vital functions of the individual, group and society as a whole. The ethnolinguistic view of the North Caucasus is a complex, dynamic, secondary formation, which has invariant ethno-linguistic constants, providing communication not only within the framework of the ethno-linguistic culture but also between cultures, due to the fact that language and culture are interconnected with each other.

Key words: North Caucasus, language, consciousness, culture, semiotization, ethnolinguistic identity, lingua-culture.

Our language reflects our culture, psyche and mode of thought. We all differ not only according to our geographical position, pronunciation and different meaning of words in our communication, but also in grammatical system (gender, case, tenses etc.) of our language. For many centuries philosophers from different edge of our earth have lined up to announce that each language reflects the qualities of the nation that speaks it. In the 17th century F. Bacon explained that one can infer "significant marks of the genius and manners of people and nations from their language". In the 18th century F. E. de Condillac pointed out that "each language expresses the character of the people who speak it". Another prominent figure as G. J. G. Herder said that "the intellect and the character of every nation are stamped in its language" [1, p.3].

We try to comprehend the fact that to talk about the world «out there» will of necessity involve not only propositions to be judged for truth, but something more – communicative intentions. The meanings carried by our words must thus depend not just on what we say, but who we are and what we hope our interlocutors to know. Yet in focusing on the ways «intentions» are embodied in all acts of speech, constrained by the relationships and expectations that define our local world [3]. We are all different and unique and we shouldn't forget about the peculiarities of language, consciousness and culture of North Caucasian's population.

"Linguistic turn" in the humanities in the beginning of the twentieth century led to the establishment and development of hermeneutics, analytical philosophy, structuralism and other humanitarian areas, according to J. Derrida "our historical and metaphysical epoch must determine the integrity of its problematic horizon through language" [7, p. 119]. Language came to be regarded as an "intermediate world" between thought and reality, individual consciousness and culture, a world in which an unstructured stream of impressions and unrelated messages got a conceptual form [10, p. 52].

Caucasus Mountains create ideal conditions for the functioning of various national languages, so the language situation in the North Caucasus is characterized by the coexistence of diverse forms of language. This region is a home for more than hundred nationalities with their own language consciousness and cultural peculiarities [11, p. 36]. Our process of thinking involves the use of language as a system. In this case, language is a mirror of the mind. The structure of our sentences is overwhelmingly similar to the structure of thoughts, taking it for granted that thoughts have structure. For example, the phrase – կարծիք զարդեց (Armenian language), qırmızı gül (Azerbaijani language), წითელი ვარდები (Georgian), which means «red roses» is structurally related in different ways to «blue delphiniums», which means that «flowers are colored» and our knowledge

Theory of Mind in Middle Childhood and Adolescence Rory T. Devine, Serena Lecce, 2021-05-26 This landmark text integrates diverse perspectives on how humans understand others minds or theory of mind beyond early childhood into middle childhood and adolescence. It explores how the neural cognitive and social changes of middle childhood and adolescence shape the ongoing development of theory of mind and how theory of mind helps children navigate their lives. Drawing on cutting edge research from leading international experts this book provides a survey and analysis of the current state and future direction of the field. It is organized around three themes relating to the key issues in contemporary research. The first part focuses on the biological and cognitive bases of theory of mind in middle childhood and adolescence. The second part goes on to explore the social predictors and consequences considering how theory of mind is shaped by social experiences and in turn impacts children's social lives in middle childhood and adolescence. Finally the third part focuses on theory of mind in the context of neurodiversity disability and youth mental health in middle childhood and adolescence. Offering in depth understanding for all students and scholars of developmental and cognitive psychology neuroscience clinical psychology and psychiatry and education this valuable text also identifies an agenda for future scholarship on this exciting topic

Walter Stace's mysticism, Walter Pahnke's psychedelic experience and Abraham Maslow's peak experiences. These ideas are shown to constitute the beginnings of a fractured discourse on the irrational. In part two, contemporary psychiatry's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual (DSM) and Foucault's History of Madness are re-read to reposition madness as not necessarily pathological. This opens the way for the identification of acute religious experiences as a new holistic and post-colonial approach through which religious data can be organized and addressed on a comparative basis. In part three, The Gospel of Mark is re-read as a case study to demonstrate the novel insights which flow from the identification of acute religious experiences. Richard Saville Smith draws on his own experiences of madness and his PhD from the School of Divinity at The University of Edinburgh to elucidate his research.

Comprehensive Dissertation Index, 1989. Psychology Today, June 1975, 1975. Tiles in a Multilingual Mosaic Michael G. Clyne, Sandra Kipp, 2006. Human history has been characterised by the movement of peoples from one part of the world to another. The current tendency towards globalisation has accentuated this movement. While the proliferation of economic ties and the speed of travel and communication have made the world a much smaller place, any particular location within the world is now faced with an increasing degree of contact between cultures and languages. Migrating people bring with them languages in various stages of planning, with differing status and with differing relationships to their personal and group identity. The present study explores the ways in which three immigrant communities have adjusted and adapted to a new setting in Australia and the ways in which the host community has contributed to this process. It focuses specifically on the ways in which patterns of language use contribute to the maintenance of a pre-migration identity and/or the negotiation of a new one. The languages chosen for this research are Macedonian, Filipino, Tagalog and Somali.
