

United States Government

Structure of the Government

The United States is a federal republic. This means that the government is made up of many different parts, each with its own responsibilities. The three main branches of the government are the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches. Each branch has its own powers and checks on the other branches to ensure a balance of power.

The Executive branch is headed by the President. The President is responsible for enforcing the laws and representing the United States in foreign affairs. The Legislative branch is made up of the House of Representatives and the Senate. They are responsible for making laws. The Judicial branch is headed by the Supreme Court. They are responsible for interpreting the laws and ensuring they are consistent with the Constitution.

Each branch has its own powers and checks on the other branches. For example, the President can veto laws passed by Congress, but Congress can override a veto with a two-thirds majority. The Supreme Court can declare laws unconstitutional, but Congress can change the Court's composition.

Major Governmental Branches

The Executive branch is responsible for enforcing the laws and representing the United States in foreign affairs. The President is the head of the Executive branch. The Vice President is the second in command. The Executive branch also includes the Department of State, the Department of Defense, and other agencies.

The Legislative branch is responsible for making laws. It is made up of the House of Representatives and the Senate. The House of Representatives is made up of members from each state, based on population. The Senate is made up of two members from each state.
