PROLOGUE

 Although I often think the way I usually do, the reason this chapter would be no more like Price's Part is it uses this form. The reader has received some history and would expect an easy introduction. This form both creates and distinguishes the Price approach, without necessarily revealing the author's identity. The reader will notice the author's handwriting, which is a combination of cursive and block letters, and the author's signature, which is a cursive script. The reader may also notice the author's name, Price, written in a bold, blocky font at the top of the page. The reader may also notice the author's name, Price, written in a bold, blocky font at the top of the page.
