Krasnopolsky, 2013-03-07 Spacecraft study of the Solar system is one of humanity's most outstanding achievements. Thanks to this study, our present knowledge of properties of and conditions on the planets exceeds many fold that of 20 years ago. Planets have been rediscovered. This is especially the case for planetary atmospheres whose properties were for the most part either not at all or only erroneously known. Much research has been invested in the study of the atmospheres of Mars and Venus and their chemical composition and photochemistry are basic problems in these studies. In the present publication I have tried to summarize all findings in this field. The English version of the book includes new data in the field from the last 3 years since the book was published in Russian. I wish to thank U von Zahn who initiated my talks with Springer Verlag and acted as technical editor. December 2, 1985. V. A. KRASNOPOLSKY

Hot House Robert G. Strom, 2007-09-08

Global warming is extremely complex because it deals with so many different characteristics of the Earth and their complex interactions. It is addressed by almost all sciences including many aspects of geosciences, atmospheric, the biological sciences and even astronomy. It has recently become the concern of other diverse disciplines such as economics, agriculture, demographics and population statistics, medicine, engineering and political science. This book attempts to address these complex interactions, integrate them and derive meaningful conclusions and possible solutions Robert Strom provides a complete easy to read explanation of past and present global climate change causes and possible solutions to the problem including the politics and reasons why this is such a politically charged issue NASA Conference Publication ,1988 The Atmosphere in Action I.
