

'Nobody wants their queers'

The 'split' between hetero feminists and lesbians

Now, while I might theoretically argue that the gay community, regardless of the extent of its political involvement, is a natural ally of women and their children, I have, nonetheless, learned one thing: Nobody will get serious about the gay community until it is a threat to the status quo.

On a recent evening, another group of radical lesbians, committed to the gay community, met at the home of a lesbian. The group was small, but the women were all very serious. They were all very serious about the gay community.

The women began to talk about their own lives. They talked about their own lives, about their own lives, about their own lives. They talked about their own lives, about their own lives, about their own lives.

They talked about their own lives, about their own lives, about their own lives. They talked about their own lives, about their own lives, about their own lives.

By 1970, the backlash had begun. It began in 1970, and it was a backlash. It was a backlash, and it was a backlash. It was a backlash, and it was a backlash.
