Systems With Learning And Memory Abilities:

Systems with Learning and Memory Abilities Jean Delacour (red.), Jean-Claude Levy, 1988 A comparison of the properties of various systems which have learning and memory abilities this book is of a multidisciplinary nature Artificial Intelligence specialists mathematicians physicists biochemists neuroscientists and psychologists are among the contributors Divided into five sections the first considers learning and memory at the behavioral level while the second is a continuation of this dealing with neural bases The third also illustrates a continuity that between neurobiology and basic biology The last two sections are both concerned with models of learning and memory one inspired or constrained mainly by biological facts and the other by physics

Assimilative Memory Marcus Dwight Larrowe, 1896

Features of Declarative and Nondeclarative Memory Richard David McKee, 1993 It has proved useful to view memory in terms of distinct biological systems falling into two broad categories declarative or conscious or explicit memory and nondeclarative or nonconscious or implicit memory This present findings concern some important aspects of declarative and nondeclarative memory Experiment 1 was a study of forgetting from declarative memory in diencephalic and medial temporal lobe amnesic patients Subjects studied 120 pictures controls 1 s item amnesics 8 s item and then took four tests of recognition memory after 10 min 2 hr and 30 32 hr delays Contrary to early reports the forgetting rate was not faster in medial temporal lobe than diencephalic amnesia Also amnesic patients did not perform better when identifying new items instead of old items The next three experiments were based on a visual paired comparison task Subjects saw 24 consecutive pairs of pictures two identical items pair and later saw another 24 pairs of pictures a previously studied and a novel item in each pair Viewing times for new and old items measured by a highly reliable method indicated that novelty preference occurred in normal subjects that it lasted only a few hours and that it was impaired in amnesia i e that task performance in humans relies on declarative memory Finally a fame judgment task was used to study aspects of nondeclarative memory Subjects pronounced names of famous and nonfamous people and then judged the fame of some of those names together with new names For normal subjects a famous decision was more likely for old names than new names Equivalent gains occurred for famous and nonfamous names The effect for nonfamous names was undisrupted by recombining the first and last names between study and test Most importantly the fame judgment effect was completely intact in amnesia The results suggest that the effect 1 involves nondeclarative memory 2 occurs for information without a preexisting representation and 3 does not require a new association to be formed between first and last names at study A context is described for applying all of the present findings to some issues concerning the neurobiology of memory

Psychological Disturbances in Epilepsy J. Chris Sackellares, Stanley Berent, 1996 Epilepsy has been thought of as a degenerative neurological disease with inevitable intellectual deterioration and few treatments for the disease were available The thinking has changed but what has remained is the fact that the amount and location of underlying brain injury contributes to psychiatric problems of epileptic patients In addition some of the treatments that are effective in treating epilepsy are causing psychiatric problems Epilepsy has been associated with intellectual impairment schizophrenia like psychosis and affective disorders Annual Review of Psychology Calvin Perry Stone,1995 Publishes original critical reviews of the significant literature and current developments in psychology
