Taiwans National Security Defense Policy And Weapons Procurement Processes:

Taiwan's National Security, Defense Policy, and Weapons Procurement Processes Michael D. Swaine, 1998 This report examines Taiwan's national security decisionmaking structure and process and the primary factors guiding its defense strategy force structure and military procurement decisions. It attempts to explain the motives and interests determining Taiwan's national security policy and defense plans and its decisions to acquire major weapons and related support systems from foreign sources including the United States. The author has determined that Taiwan's national security policy process is poorly coordinated both within the top levels of the senior leadership and between the civilian and military elite. As a result Taiwan lacks a strategy that can integrate and guide its foreign and defense policies. He also concludes that Taiwan's defense policy and procurement decisionmaking process are significantly influenced by a variety of non-military criteria that complicate efforts to ascertain the motives and objectives of Taiwan's requests for U.S. arms and call into question Taiwan's ability to effectively absorb such arms. He recommends that the United States continue to acquire more and better information about Taiwan's strengths and weaknesses in these areas and especially to more accurately assess Taiwan's requests for military sales from the United States. He also recommends that the United States 1) avoid providing arms and assistance to Taiwan in ways that provoke greater tension with China without appreciably improving Taiwan's defense capabilities, 2) continue to strengthen contacts with the ROC military but avoid interacting with the Taiwan armed forces in a way that suggests the establishment of joint U.S.-Taiwan operational capabilities, and 3) develop and maintain close contacts with Taiwan's key decisionmakers.

Taiwan's Security Policy Michael Chase, 2008 Confounding expectations Taiwan is reducing its military spending even as its sole adversary the People's Republic of China modernizes its military and significantly increases its defense budget. Michael Chase examines the key factors that have shaped Taiwan's security policy over a span of three decades. Chase explores both the role of US security assurances in formulating Taiwan's defense policy and the profound influence that domestic politics has played. He also considers the context of cross Strait relations and the implications of Taiwan's security choices for potential instability and conflict in the region and beyond. Relying on extensive Chinese language sources and interviews he offers the most definitive treatment of Taiwan's security policy to date.
