The New York Times Book Review ,1969 Houdini's Shadow Leo Brent Robillard,2006 The reader first meets young Jake O Sullivan the protagonist in 1912 Montreal where his father is a washed up boxer in hock to a small time Jewish mobster Jake has had a lifelong obsession with the escape artist Houdini after seeing the famous magician perform one of his stunts Flash forward to 1929 when Jake is now a young man performing dangerous stunts himself one of which includes stealing a mobster's moll Lulu is gorgeous but fickle and causes Jake no end of problems requiring other sorts of tricky escapes. The dark underside of Montreal during this period is deftly rendered with its steamy jazz clubs, zinc bars and a Negress blowing through an alto saxophone. Eventually Jake takes on a smuggling job with a nervous little Frenchman that goes horribly wrong and Jake and Lulu are soon running from the law as well as the lawless. When things settle down Jake manages to pull off a nifty combination escape stunt and bank job. Here the story goes slightly off the rails with the appearance of a girl named Bobby and a journey to New Orleans but altogether this is a well crafted novel especially in its period details.
