The U.S. and the Mexican War 1846-48 Philipp-Henning v. Bruchhausen, 2017-06-28 Seminar paper from the year 2016 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Culture and Applied Geography grade 1.3 Ernst Moritz Arndt University of Greifswald anglistik course PS America 18th Century Ideals 21st Century Reality language English abstract The Mexican War from 1846 1848 is one of the more obscure some would even say forgotten wars out of the long list of international conflicts the United States were party to It marks the first time though that America as an independent nation invaded another independent nation the multitude of armed conflicts with the native Indians and the former colonial powers since the Revolutionary War notwithstanding While the annexation of Texas and the following war leading to the annexation of the whole modern south west of the USA might have seemed to be the preordained outcome to most contemporary observers of the time like John L O Sullivan who actually coined the term Manifest Destiny in 1845 it was by no way unavoidable Actually a couple of thousand more votes for the moderate Whig Party candidate Henry Clay in 1844 might have turned the war a lot less bloody if war had erupted at all But the close victory of D James K Polk who actually campaigned on the annexation of Texas without Mexico's approval almost assured a bitter conflict Alas the most crucial reason for the outbreak of the Mexican War was not the Anglo Saxon's belief in Manifest Destiny and the subsequent ruthless push westwards but Mexico's weakness to resist it While the two freshly independent countries were posed to clash over Texas's western and southern boundaries a war on this scale could have easily been averted if not for President Polk's diplomatic ineptitude and the Mexican elites willingness to sacrifice several ten thousand people just to demonstrate defiance and to keep their face
