

THE MASTERS OF SOLITUDE

Marvin Kaye & Parkie Gochwin

Paul Slinger, And I was alone

His parents came from two very different worlds. And Slinger was an outcast, a loner, who "brought the outside world... in isolation all around."

The story begins here, further. Gochwin's parents, like Slinger, are people who celebrated the counterculture when they developed an unusual sympathy for "inner-looking." What makes Paul Slinger so alone with others? The story answers that unspoken theme, but it also shows the evolution of relationships, the author's insights... the last pages, in addition, teach Slinger the need, the need, indeed, to find... a better place.

From a deeply religious childhood to atheism, life's choices, and, finally, the City, here their paths converge. Gochwin reveals his personal journey, while the author, all the while, goes through his own experiences. The City, a space that holds them in its darkened arms of love and control. Paul Slinger, like so many others before him, reaches the city and the outside, through whom he can experience a better place.
