The Matrix of Policy in the Philippines Harvey A. Averch, 1979      Political Control of the Economy Edward R. Tufte, 1978 Speculations about the effects of politics on economic life have a long and vital tradition but few efforts have been made to determine the precise relationship between them Edward Tufte a political scientist who covered the 1976 Presidential election for Newsweek seeks to do just that His sharp analyses and astute observations lead to an eye opening view of the impact of political life on the national economy of America and other capitalist democracies The analysis demonstrates how politicians political parties and voters decide who gets what when and how in the economic arena A nation's politics it is argued shape the most important aspects of economic life inflation unemployment income redistribution the growth of government and the extent of central economic control Both statistical data and case studies based on interviews and Presidential documents are brought to bear on four topics They are 1 the political manipulation of the economy in election years 2 the new international electoral economic cycle 3 the decisive role of political leaders and parties in shaping macroeconomic outcomes and 4 the response of the electorate to changing economic conditions Finally the book clarifies a central question in political economy How can national economic policy be conducted in both a democratic and a competent fashion

Nelson, 1990-03 The acute economic pressures of the 1980s have forced virtually all of Latin America and Africa and some countries in Asia into painful austerity programs and difficult economic reforms. Scholars have intensively analyzed the economics of this situation but they have given much less attention to the political forces involved. In this volume a number of eminent contributors analyze the politics of adjustment in thirteen countries and nineteen governments drawing comparisons not only across the full set of cases but also within clusters selected to clarify specific issues. Why do some governments respond promptly to signs of economic trouble while others muddle indecisively for years? Why do some confine their response to temporary macroeconomic measures while others adopt broader even sweeping programs of reform? What leads some countries to experiment with heterodox approaches while most however reluctantly pursue orthodox courses? Why confronted with intense political protest have some governments persisted while others have altered or abandoned course? The answers to these questions are political not economic and they are examined here by Thomas M. Callaghy, Stephan Haggard, Miles Kahler, Robert R. Kauman, Joan M. Nelson, and Barbara Stallings.

It explores the political economy of macro policies examining which groups in society are likely to benefit from alternative policies and technologies.

World Report on Knowledge for Better Health World Health Organization, 2004-09-02 This book reviews the current state of health research and concludes that more investment is needed. Research need to be managed more effectively to help strengthen health systems and build public confidence in science. Stronger emphasis should be placed on translating knowledge into action. There are five sections: learning to improve health gives an overview and some historical perspective towards a scientific basis for health systems; strengthening health research systems; linking research to action and recommendations; and an action plan.

Philippines, 1976      A Computable General Equilibrium Model for Environment Policy Analysis Luz Centeno Stenberg, Mahinda Siriwardana, 2009 The deterioration of forest resources and poor economic performance in the Philippines calls for a serious rethinking in economic policies addressing both environmental and economic objectives In order to protect the Philippine forests the government implemented the Master Plan for Forestry Development covering a 25 year period i e 1991 2015 However after 16 years of implementation the Philippine forestry industry has experienced a further reduction in production and in areas devoted to old growth forests The annual allowable cut remains excessive as it was prior to 1990 This proves to be an important forestry policy instrument as the findings in this book suggest that the volume of timber or the rate of deforestation is directly affected by the annual allowable cut rather than by population growth and poverty The recent economic literature suggests the possibility of attaining both macroeconomic growth and sustainability in natural resource use To examine the economy wide effects of the Master Plan and the plausibility of attaining sustainable growth a computable general equilibrium CGE model is developed with an appended forestry sub model adopted from Dee 1991 The research found that given steady state in forestry the Dee model can serve as a simple representation of forest growth However in the context of positive environmental services and non steady state growth in forestry the Dee model might be inappropriate Given the present land use arrangements in the Philippines the book suggests that the country will meet both objectives of growth and conservation via a combination of a reduction in forestry discount rate and a uniform reduction in sectoral tariffs Despite the positive effect of uniform tariff reduction on gross domestic product employment in some sectors is negatively affected particularly that of farmers fishers and foresters This indicates the significance of reforestation as an employment generation tool notwithstanding its benefits towards resource and soil conservation In general forest conservation can be achieved with minimal economic sacrifice Therefore depending on the capability of the Philippine government to enforce land use policies a direct set aside program national parks and the implementation of selective logging programs can assist in the regeneration and perpetuation of the Philippine forest The aim of the book is to illustrate the application of computable general equilibrium CGE models in analysing environmental issues specifically deforestation in countries with limited access to primary secondary data It is an outcome of a government funded research project on deforestation in developing economies We hope that this book will appeal to policy makers politicians academics government officials especially in developing countries post graduate students interested in applied general equilibrium research and the like The book brings into light a state of the art CGE model with empirical applications into forestry policies in a developing Asian economy Hence the analytical methodology and the empirical policy analysis have a greater applicability to many countries in Asia and beyond where deforestation has become a critical dynamic issue This book can also be used as a textbook in advanced courses in economic modeling at graduate level in universities      Agricultural Policy in the Philippines Aida R.
