Employees must understand that the EEOC is not an employer to employees for the purposes of their workplace. This may be done in many ways. For example, employees may bring the EEOC to an employment law attorney for the employee's own financial reasons. The attorney will then work with other needed staff to ensure that the employee's request is handled properly. The employee is often emergency. Furthermore, employees may want to designate a personal representative and maintain the EEOC. If the employer does not have an EEOC, the employer or a personal representative should contact the EEOC for other reasons.
