

Talking into Writing Exercises for Basic Writers

Authors Donald Rubin and William Dodd open this monograph by noting that remediation programs for basic writers "are remarkable for the persistence with which they adhere to instructional techniques of proven ineptitude." Rubin and Dodd point out that it is the rhetorical demands of composition, rather than ignorance of writing conventions, that pose the greatest problem for basic writers. Many basic writers come from predominantly oral-based cultures whose style of discourse is radically different from the expository style taught in the schools. However, talking itself, in the form of oral communication exercises, can promote writing proficiency in three ways: by serving as an antecedent at stages in the writing process, as an adjunct to writing by providing a bridge between dialogue and written monologue, and as a calculator for developing the cognitive processes underlying writing proficiency.

The Practice section of the monograph presents instructions and materials for four types of speech exercises designed to develop composition skills: role switching, peer questioning, topic sculpting, and forensic discussion. A final section discusses the use of these exercises across the curriculum.

One teacher, "This book does many things well. It provides a theoretical base supported by research and provides a variety of classroom experiences that should appeal to both students and teachers. The book will also appeal not only to college audiences but to junior high and secondary teachers as well."

References and a selected bibliography of both secondary and college items are included.
