freedom and modern conceptions of the self as they address questions of identity nationalism politics ethics poetic language and freedom The speakers represent a comprehensive range of positions in relation to the most vexing ethical issues facing hermeneutic practice today Taking their inspiration from a variety of perspectives from psychoanalytic therapy Kristeva to women s art Cixous to the experience of marginality and dispossession Said each of them seeks in the ashes of the autonomous liberal self a basis for a new ethics from which a new sense of responsibility toward others might be forged Each tries to construct for him or herself a way of relating thought and literature to freedom and ethical imperatives in the face of radical questions about the nature of meaning and truth The volume is a testimony both to the richness of critical thought today and to the commitment of its leading exponents to the issue of humanrights *Essays and addresses, religious, literary and social, ed. by J.C.
