The Greek Prothetic Vowel William F. Wyatt (Jr.), 1972      Lectures on the Science of Language Friedrich Max Müller, 1877      Vowel Prosthesis in Romance Rodney Sampson, 2009-10-29 This book presents for the first time an in depth historical account of vowel prosthesis in the Romance languages Vowel prosthesis is a change which involves the appearance of a non etymological vowel at the beginning of a word a familiar example is the initial e which appears in the development of Latin sperare to Spanish esperar and French espérer to hope Despite its widespread incidence in the Romance languages it has remained poorly studied In his wide ranging comparative coverage Professor Sampson identifies three main categories of vowel prosthesis that have occurred and explores in detail their historical trajectory and the relationship between them The presentation draws freely throughout on the rich philological materials available from Romance and brings to light various unexpected changes in the productive use of prosthesis through time For example in French and Italian which is Tuscan based one category of prosthesis became well established in the early Middle Ages only to lose productivity and subsequently become moribund With its extensive use of empirical data and findings from theoretical linguistics the book offers a thorough and revealing account of a fascinating chapter in the phonological history of Romance      Evidence for laryngeals Werner Winter, 2018-03-19 No detailed description available for Evidence for laryngeals      Lectures on the Science of Language Max Müller, 1873      Transactions of the Philological Society Philological Society (Great Britain), 1894 List of members included in most vols      Lectures on the Science of Language Müller, 1880      The Greek Prothetic Vowel and the

Sanskrit Long-reduplicant Perfect Jeffrey T. Conn,2007 Although now accepted almost universally the Laryngeal Theory of Indo European linguistics has been criticized in the past as being too abstract and formalistic making excessive claims for the effects of the posited laryngeal segments and implying typologically odd features of the proto language This study addresses a small subset of these concerns by statistically measuring the degree of correlation between two phenomena which the Laryngeal Theory implies should be correlated These are the prothetic vowel of Greek and the lengthened reduplication syllable of certain Sanskrit perfects Both of these are attributed by the Laryngeal Theory to the presence of a laryngeal segment at the beginning of the root in proto Indo European If the Laryngeal Theory is correct there should be more roots whose reflexes show both of these developments than should occur by chance The correlation is measured by the Fisher s Exact test For the set of all roots as defined traditionally the P value is 0.25349 for roots grouped together without distinguishing between root extensions and similar alterations the value is 0.26401 and for resonant initial roots the value is 0.67371 These figures are consistent with the predictions of the Laryngeal Theory but also with the hypothesis that both the Greek prothetic vowel and the Sanskrit long reduplicant perfects are due to epenthesis before resonant initial roots
