

THE GREAT AMERICAN CON GAME

by
Jon
Stops

On July 3, 1939, during the progress of the First World Science Fiction Convention, Sam Moskowitz "...envisioned a day when such gatherings would be truly international because of greatly accelerated transportation devices, and expressed the opinion that science fiction would have to race to keep ahead of science."

That day is now with us. Now we must race, not to keep ahead, but to catch up with that science and its "greatly accelerated transportation devices." It is important to note that Moskowitz, who was chairman of that con, recognized the discrepancy between its hopeful pretensions, and its reality. Because we have forgotten it.

The antics with semantics are ours: we've called it a World Science Fiction Convention for three decades, but only now are we actually beginning to create a yearly international gathering of sf fans. It is this confusion between the map and the territory, between the "Worldcon" and the reality, that make it appear that the North American con proposal is something new.

We may have wanted to believe that our yearly gathering was a world get-together: it did, no doubt, inflate our egos. But we've never acted as if it actually were. The Worldcon has left North America only twice in 27 tries, not a very good score in any game.

This is not to argue against an international con. Far from it.
