

THE GEOPOLITICS OF LENINISM: REFLECTIONS

Stanley W. Page

Before 1914, although well known as the leader of Russia's most radical Marxist faction, Lenin never enjoyed the status of a major figure in the Second International. However, the outbreak of World War One changed his international, not to mention, his self image. For a person harboring Lenin's ambitions — it seems clear that since the turn of the century he had visions of himself as the leader of the world revolution² — the situation could scarcely have been more propitious. In the face of the very "imperialist" was which,³ in 1909, Karl Kautsky had predicted would bring on a German revolution, the Marxist elite of all the warring powers, including Germany, had, to Lenin's (delighted?) surprise, surrendered like sheep to the spirit of chauvinism, allowing their proletarian followers to die by the millions in foul trenches.

Surely, Lenin thought, this condition could not endure for too long. Surely the German proletariat, so long the bellwether of European Marxism, was bound to rise, and, there being none other available to act as their leader, Lenin would be happy to oblige. In Germany, Kautsky and most other Social-Democrats had remained silent, only Liebknecht daring to speak up against the war, as far as Lenin knew. In Switzerland, the home of most of the Russian exiles during the war, as Alfred Senn's The Russian Revolution in Switzerland, 1914-1917 so well depicts, Lenin had at his disposal various cells of Bolsheviks abroad. Although certain members of them often heatedly disagreed with Lenin, on one or another issue, they were, in general, prepared to do his bidding. To his Russian "corps" Lenin soon added a small company of young Swiss left socialists, all in all giving Lenin an apparatus that he could count upon. Aside from that he continued to publish the Bolshevik Central Organ, Sotsial-Demokrat, and since all important Russian Bolsheviks had been arrested or driven underground or abroad, Lenin, in effect, became the Central Committee of the Bolshevik Party, with the power to publish exactly what he wished and to maneuver as he saw fit.

Proceeding rapidly to shed the mantle of Russian leader for that of the true internationalist,⁴ Lenin considered his first priority the task of somehow making contact with the betrayed German workers. Since he had no direct channel, Lenin, in Bern, made every conceivable effort to project his views into Germany through international women's and youth conferences which met in Bern in the spring of 1915 and which were largely dominated by German delegates. However, in each case, his views calling for civil war in each country went against the conference majority. Frustrated, but undaunted, Lenin prepared most meticulously to use his

North Korea and the Geopolitics of Development Kevin Gray, Jong-Woon Lee, 2021-04-15 Kevin Gray and Jong Woon Lee focus on three geopolitical moments that have been crucial to the shaping of the North Korean system colonialism the Cold War and the rise of China to demonstrate how broader processes of geopolitical contestation have fundamentally shaped the emergence and subsequent development of the North Korean political economy They argue that placing the nexus between geopolitics and development at the centre of the analysis helps explain the country's rapid catch up industrialisation its subsequent secular decline followed by collapse in the 1990s and why the reform process has been markedly more conservative compared to other state socialist societies As such they draw attention to the specificities of North Korea's experience of late development but also place it in a broader comparative context by understanding the country not solely through the analytical lens of state socialism but also as an instance of post colonial national development

Last War of the World-Island: The Geopolitics of Contemporary Russia Alexander Dugin, 2015-05-26 Alexander Dugin traces the geopolitical development of Russia from its origins in Kievan Rus and the Russian Empire through the peak of its global influence during the Soviet era and finally to the current presidency of Vladimir Putin Dugin sees Russia as the primary geopolitical pole of the land based civilizations of the world forever destined to be in conflict with the sea based civilizations At one time the pole of the seafaring civilizations was the British Empire today it is represented by the United States and its NATO allies Russia can only fulfill its geopolitical mission by remaining in opposition to the sea powers Today according to Dugin this conflict is not only geopolitical in scope but also ideological Russia is the primary representative and defender of traditional values and idealism whereas the West stands for the values of liberalism and the market driven society Whereas Russia began to lose sight of its mission during the 1990s and threatened to succumb to domination by the Western powers Dugin believes that Putin has begun to correct its course and return Russia to her proper place But the struggle is far from over while progress has been made Russia remains torn between its traditional nature and the temptations of globalism and Westernization and its enemies undermine it at every turn Dugin makes the case that it is only by remaining true to the Eurasian path that Russia can survive and flourish in any genuine sense otherwise it will be reduced to a servile and secondary place in the world and the forces of liberalism will dominate the world unopposed
