THE GLASGOW STYLE

Concomitant with the more familiar conditioner Art Nouveau was another Art Nouveau or Glasgow Style. This style was developed during the late 19th century by a group from the Glasgow School of Art. Charles Rennie Mackintosh, Herbert MacNair, Margaret Macdonald and Frances Macdonald, also known as "the four", were strongly influenced by the simplicity found in Japanese prints.

This group innovated a geometric style that balanced and tempered floral and curvilinear elements with a strong rectilinear structure. Much of the work of the four is characterized by symbolic imagery and stylized forms. Rather than a reliance on elaborate and organic curves they focused on the linear. They utilized bold, simple outlines that defined planes of color.

Much of their work has a strong vertically and abstract interpretations of the human form. Charles Rennie Mackintosh made significant contributions to architecture and object design, via his experimental ideas of form over an total environment. Mackintosh's main design theme was an emphasis on the vertical. Glasgow Style was an important reaction to the problems of the 20th century.

—THE GLASGOW GIRLS—

Because historically we live in a male-centric society, much of the history about the Glasgow Style has been described towards Charles and Herbert MacNair. However, the two most prominent women of the Glasgow Style are sisters Margaret and Frances, who married MacNair and MacNair, respectively. Margaret was the artist and the better known sister. Despite being considered the heart of the Glasgow Style, MacNair's work is rarely shown. Margaret has genius. The Glasgow girls, as they are known, shared a studio and worked with similar materials, including metal work and paint. But while Margaret's work remained mainly decorative, Frances' work became more about women's issues and had more of an emotional quality. Little work remains of Frances as her husband destroyed much of it after her death.
