

Containers

Bulbs are ideal for growing in pots, but you can still encounter a few issues along the way. Luckily we've come up with easy solutions.

Q Why did the spring bulbs I planted in pots all fail to flower?

A Maybe the bulbs were too young and hadn't yet reached flowering size. Try replanting them into the garden and digging in some good-quality fertiliser, such as blood, fish and bone-meal. Plant the bulbs at a depth equal to about three times the bulb's height, as shallow planting can also cause a lack of flowers.

Q Do I need to feed spring bulbs growing in containers?

A Give them a high-potassium liquid feed, such as tomato fertiliser, from early spring until about six weeks after flowering. Water it on regularly, following the instructions on the pack. Be sure to keep the pots well watered too, throughout the whole growing season.

Q Which types of bulb would do well in windowboxes?

A Dwarf bulbs are ideal for containers of all kinds, including windowboxes. These include miniature daffodils, crocuses and dwarf irises. These don't need much space and their intricate flowers can be viewed more easily when raised off the ground. Since most bulbs bloom for a relatively short period, it's a good idea to plant more than one type to extend the flowering period. Once their blooms fade, remove them from the display and replace with summer bedding.

Q What should I do once my pot display has finished flowering?

A Remove spent flowers and move the pots out of sight. Apply liquid feed regularly until the foliage dies down, but don't cut back the foliage while it's still green, as it's helping to build up the bulb for next year. Alternatively, lift the bulbs once the foliage dies, cut off the old leaves and plant in the garden where you want them to flower next year.
