Standing Into Danger Cassie Brown

DOUBLEDAY

On the main deck, aft of the galley deck, Harry Epper, W. G. Harris, and others had been arguing about the best way to get to the beach. It was obvious to them that they were in a life-and-death struggle...

The oil slick on the water in the cove had a frightening effect on the turbulent sea, and Harris appeared set on swimming alone. "I can work through the oil to the shore," he said.

"Don't do it," Epper said.
"I can do it," W. G. insisted.
"The water is too cold and rough, you'll never make it."

"Look at it," Epper reasoned. "Look at the waves breaking on the cliffs. You'll never make it."

Harris would not listen. He had made up his mind and before anyone could stop him, he jumped over the side.

Epper was stunned. He watched the water, but saw no sign of his friend. A few minutes followed. W. G. had begun to swim toward the beach, but a wave took him toward the oil slick, where they disappeared from view.

Then, before his horrified eyes, they were lifted to the sky, crest of a great wave and capped by the angry rock slinging up they went, nearly to the top; then the sea dropped back with a crash, throwing tremendously at the swimming still where his disappearance had been chalked to their deaths. Epper felt very strange, as if a part of him had been cut away. Just like that, W. G. was dead. He could not believe it.
