

1. a. Tethered sensors detect conformational changes in cytochrome c that are detected by the sensors in the hub to initiate a cellular response. This is like a cellular sensor that can sense changes in the sensors that measure the cytochrome c "conformational changes" sensed by other sensors and other sensors measure the changes in the cytochrome c "conformational changes" sensed by the sensors. "What is the mechanism for this switching the sensors to respond to the other changes?"

b. What is the logic of the sensors? It must react differently to the changes, otherwise there is no switching.
