As the name suggests, both biology and chemistry are encompassed under this subject. It is the functions, composition and structure of the substances that make up a living organism. In this book, our focus will be on the chemical processes that are going on in the human body in particular. It is the study of the constituents of cells such as proteins, carbohydrates, lipids, nucleic acids and other biomolecules and also of their structure, functions and transformations that occurring during a life process. Analytical Characterization of Biotherapeutics Jennie R. Lill, Wendy Sandoval, 2017-07-10 The definitive guide to the myriad analytical techniques available to scientists involved in biotherapeutics research. Analytical Characterization of Biotherapeutics covers all current and emerging analytical tools and techniques used for the characterization of therapeutic proteins and antigen reagents. From basic recombinant antigen and antibody characterization to complex analyses for increasingly complex molecular designs, the book explores the history of the analysis techniques and offers valuable insights into the most important emerging analytical solutions. In addition, it frames critical questions warranting attention in the design and delivery of a therapeutic protein, exposes analytical challenges that may occur when characterizing these molecules and presents a number of tested solutions. The first single volume guide of its kind, Analytical Characterization of Biotherapeutics brings together contributions from scientists at the leading edge of biotherapeutics research and manufacturing. Key topics covered in depth include the structural characterization of recombinant proteins and antibodies, antibody de novo sequencing, characterization of antibody drug conjugates, characterization of bi-specific or other hybrid molecules, characterization of manufacturing host cell contaminant proteins, analytical tools for biologics molecular assessment and more. Each chapter is written by a recognized expert or experts in their field who discuss current and cutting edge approaches to fully characterizing biotherapeutic proteins and antigen reagents. Covers the full range of characterization strategies for large molecule based therapeutics. Provides an up to date account of the latest approaches used for large molecule characterization.

Chapters cover the background needed to understand the challenges at hand solutions to characterize these large molecules and a summary of emerging options for analytical characterization Analytical Characterization of Biotherapeutics is an up to date resource for analytical scientists biologists and mass spectrometrists involved in the analysis of biomolecules as well as scientists employed in the pharmaceuticals and biotechnology industries Graduate students in biology and analytical science and their instructors will find it to be fascinating and instructive supplementary reading Theory and Practice of
