Carlyle Thomas Carlyle,1897 Emergent phonology Diana Archangeli ,Douglas Pulleyblank ,2022 To what extent do complex phonological patterns require the postulation of universal mechanisms specific to language In this volume we explore the Emergent Hypothesis that the innate language specific faculty driving the shape of adult grammars is minimal with grammar development relying instead on cognitive capacities of a general nature

Generalisations about sounds and about the way sounds are organised into meaningful units are constructed in a bottom up fashion As such phonology is emergent We present arguments for considering the Emergent Hypothesis both conceptually and by working through an extended example in order to demonstrate how an adult grammar might emerge from the input encountered by a learner Developing a concrete data driven approach we argue that the conventional abstract notion of unique underlying representations is unmotivated such underlying representations would require some innate principle to ensure their postulation by a learner We review the history of the concept and show that such postulated forms result in undesirable phonological consequences We work through several case studies to illustrate how various types of phonological patterns might be accounted for in the proposed framework The case studies illustrate patterns of allophony of productive and unproductive patterns of alternation and cases where the surface manifestation of a feature does not seem to correspond to its morphological source We consider cases where a phonetic distinction that is binary seems to manifest itself in a way that is morphologically ternary and we consider cases where underlying representations of considerable abstractness have been posited in previous frameworks We also consider cases of opacity where observed phonological properties do not neatly map onto the phonological generalisations governing patterns of alternation Textiles of Sri Lanka Gayathri Madubhani
