Love and Dramatic Genre - Approaches to the Topic of Love in Three Shakespearean Plays Thomas Eger, 2007-08 Examination Thesis from the year 2003 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Literature grade 1-3 Bielefeld University 71 entries in the bibliography language English abstract Love is a central topic in Shakespeare's plays. Many of his couples have gained a status of immortality. Antony and Cleopatra, Romeo and Juliet, or Beatrice and Benedick are only a few examples. These lovers share one experience which Lysander in A Midsummer Night's Dream sums up very clearly: The course of true love never did run smooth. 1.1.134 This dilemma is the raw material I am interested in. I will take three Shakespearean plays with love as their central issue and examine the protagonists' courses of love in them. This involves the beginning, the obstacles, the way the reactions to these obstacles, and the final failure or success to overcome them. The plays chosen are Romeo and Juliet, All's Well that Ends Well, and The Taming of the Shrew. In the First Folio edition, the first one is classified as belonging to the literary form of tragedy, the latter two as comedies. This leads me to the second element in the title, which is dramatic genre. What Northrop Frye says about comedy is also valid for tragedy. If a play in a theatre is subtitled a comedy, information is conveyed to a potential audience.

about what kind of thing to expect and this type of information has been intelligible since before the days of Aristophanes. One such expectation concerns a play's mood. Here lies a fundamental difference between tragedy and comedy. Generally speaking, the audience expects that a comedy creates a happy mood and a tragedy a sad one. However, I am not alone in finding that Romeo is a rather happy play over long stretches, whereas The Taming of the Shrew and All's Well That Ends Well are anything but thoroughly happy pieces. In these three dramas, Shakespeare only partly fulfils the expectations which are evoked. Their generic structure does not generate.

When Cara crash-lands on Jord and is rescued by Geir, he is determined to keep her for himself. But Geir has a partner he loves like a brother, and Cara can't survive the harsh climate or live off his food. For her, he'll learn to share. For him, she'll betray everything she's ever known.
