- Constructing Memories of Ourselves and Our Worlds
  - Do you agree or disagree with the following statement:
    - “Memory can be likened to a storage chest in the brain into which we deposit material and from which we can withdraw if later needed. Occasionally, something is lost from the chest, and then we say we have forgotten.”
    - 85% of college students agree. However, psychology has proved the opposite. We construct memories at the time of withdrawal.
    - False Memories

Social Worlds of Sentencing Jeffery T. Ulmer, 1997-07-31 Many states and the federal system have embraced sentencing guidelines as a mechanism of sentencing reform This book draws from interactionist theories of organizations and James Eisenstein's depiction of courts as communities to frame an investigation of sentencing disparity case processing and organizational relations under Pennsylvania's sentencing guidelines The author provides a statistical analysis of statewide sentencing outcomes and a comparative statistical and ethnographic analysis of three different sized county courts The statistical data show that the major influences on sentencing are legally prescribed ones but that factors such as conviction by trial race and gender and court size are also significant Ethnographic data illuminate processes behind the statistics by connecting court organizational contexts to case processing strategies and these strategies to sentencing outcomes The book concludes with twelve general propositions for future research discussing possibilities and limitations of sentencing guidelines and addressing broader issues in the sociology of crime law and organizations     Sentencing and Society Cyrus Tata, Neil Hutton, 2017-03-02 Combining the latest work of leading sentencing and punishment scholars from twelve different countries this major new international volume answers key questions in the study of sentencing and society It presents not only a rigorous examination of the latest legal and empirical research from around the world but also reveals the workings of sentencing within society and as a social practice Traditionally work in the field of sentencing has been dominated by legal and philosophical approaches Distinctively this volume provides a more sociological approach to sentencing so allowing previously unanswered questions to be addressed and new questions to be opened This extensive collection is drawn from around one third of the papers presented at the First International Conference on Sentencing and Society Almost without exception the chapters have been revised cross referenced and updated The overall themes and findings of the international volume are set out by the opening Introduction and the closing Reflections chapters Research findings on particular penal policy questions are balanced with an analysis of fundamental conceptual issues making this international volume essential reading for sentencing and punishment scholars criminal justice policy makers and graduate students     Our Social World Dr Jeanne H Ballantine, Keith A.
