the SSA's ultimate award decision are noisy but unbiased indicators of a latent true disability status indicator. We find that approximately 20% of SSI/SSI applicants who are ultimately awarded benefits are not disabled and that 60% of applicants who were denied benefits are disabled. Our analysis also yields insights into the patterns of self-selection induced by varying delays and award probabilities at various levels of the application and appeal process. We construct an optimal statistical screening rule using a subset of objective health indicators that the SSA uses in making award decisions that results in significantly lower classification error rates than does SSA's current award process. Social Security Handbook, 1997
