Other research suggests that chemical methods based on environmental parameters are difficult to implement because of the complex nature of rivers. Many parameters are potential indicators of water-quality changes, but these variables change over time, making it difficult to determine which parameters are most appropriate. The results of this study suggest that environmental monitoring is a feasible way to monitor water-quality changes and that the community-based approach can be used effectively to monitor water-quality changes in rivers. The community-based approach can be used effectively to monitor water-quality changes in rivers, and environmental measurements and monitoring techniques developed for these rivers can be used for other rivers. However, although these techniques and environmental measurements can be used effectively to monitor water-quality changes in rivers, further research is needed to develop more effective techniques and to improve the quality of environmental measurements.
