Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the health-related quality of life of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group participated in a supervised exercise program, while the control group received usual care. The primary outcome was the change in the Short Form-36 (SF-36) score. The secondary outcomes were the change in the COPD Assessment Test (CAT) score, the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) distance, and the change in the Borg scale of perceived exertion (RPE). The results showed that the intervention group had a significantly greater improvement in the SF-36 score compared to the control group. The intervention group also had a significantly greater improvement in the CAT score, the 6MWT distance, and the RPE score compared to the control group. The results suggest that a supervised exercise program can improve the health-related quality of life of older adults with COPD.
