preserve their autonomy and self esteem and effect permanent change The therapist functions as a consultant to the parents similar to the way a supervisor functions as a consultant to a therapist Just as therapists learn about their patients in working with a supervisor parents learn to become more introspective thoughtful and knowledgeable about their own child It would injure the patient therapist relationship for the supervisor to work directly with the patient In the same way the child is better served when the parents learn how to handle conflict and development themselves rather than having a therapist intervene with the parent child relationship Parent therapy addresses the parents unconscious conflicts in an atmosphere of collaboration with the therapist and has a life long effect
