Wittering,2013-02-07 South Cambridgeshire has some of the richest arable land in England and has been cultivated for millennia By the turn of the nineteenth century industrialisation and massive population growth had resulted in an enormous increase in the demand for food which in turn led to enclosure But this desire to plough every available piece of land resulted in the destruction of many valuable and distinctive habitats that had existed for centuries The Ecology of Enclosure breaks new ground in comparing the effect of Parliamentary Enclosure with the findings of the enthusiastic Botanisers from Cambridge this reveals not only the effect of enclosure on the ecology of the land but also on the people whose link with the land was broken The first section presents a study of social and agricultural life before enclosure describing geology and climate the fold course open field system of farming and the strict stinting rules which governed how land could be used for grazing and stock movement and the crop rotation systems employed The second part describes the process of enclosure including opposition to it the changes that occurred to the landscape and within village communities as work in industry gradually replaced rural occupations the effects of fencing on movement and of the loss of common land to the plough The third section is an analysis of the new study of Botany which the University of Cambridge was enjoying in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries based on their own records and a review of some of the specific effects on the flora and fauna of the area Serials Currently Received by the National Agricultural Library, 1974 National Agricultural Library (U.S.),1974

Science for All Peter J. Bowler,2009-10-15 Recent scholarship has revealed that pioneering Victorian scientists endeavored through voluminous writing to raise public interest in science and its implications But it has generally been assumed that once science became a profession around the turn of the century this new generation of scientists turned its collective back on public outreach Science for All debunks this apocryphal notion Peter J Bowler surveys the books serial works magazines and newspapers published between 1900 and the outbreak of World War II to show that practicing scientists were very active in writing about their work for a general readership Science for All argues that the social environment of early twentieth century Britain created a substantial market for science books and magazines aimed at those who had benefited from better secondary education but could not access higher learning Scientists found it easy and profitable to write for this audience Bowler reveals and because their work was seen as educational they faced no hostility from their peers But when admission to colleges and universities became more accessible in the 1960s this market diminished and professional scientists began to lose interest in writing at the nonspecialist level Eagerly anticipated by scholars of scientific engagement throughout the ages Science for All sheds light on our own era and the continuing tension
