Lawrence E. Babits, Hans Van Tilburg, 1998-01-31 A collection of writings from lectures academic papers and journal articles on theory and practice of maritime archaeology covering the period from the field's inception in the late 1940s to the present. Articles encompass different styles and methodologies of archaeological practice and describe progress in the technology of diving and excavation over the decade. Some articles reflect the long standing rivalry between commercial salvors and archaeologists and some reveal contributions to the field from amateurs and treasure hunters. For students professionals and hobbyists. Annotation copyrighted by Book News Inc Portland OR

Encyclopaedia of Underwater and Maritime Archaeology James P. Delgado, 1997 The theory and practice of underwater archaeology includes nearly every archaeological discipline from prehistoric archaeology to the modern era

A Methodology for Conducting Underwater Archaeological Surveys Lynn H. Samuel, 1990 Departments of transportation and other construction agencies are required to locate and conserve cultural resources located in the area of a construction project. Although most organizations have procedures for locating cultural resources on land the relatively new field of underwater archaeology lacks clearly defined guidelines for preconstruction surveys for structures over water. The lack of specific guidelines complicates decisions by administrators who are unfamiliar with the issues concerning submerged cultural resources but who are nevertheless required to consider them in planning projects. The increase in public interest in underwater archaeology and the recent passage of legislation protecting underwater historical sites indicate that greater attention will need to be directed toward consideration of these resources in construction projects. This report reviews the relevant cultural resource legislation and it summarizes the origins techniques and working conditions of underwater archaeology. The differences between underwater and land archaeology are primarily related to the specialized technology required for underwater work and exploration therefore the methodology of underwater archaeology and the application of survey procedures are discussed in detail

The Coronado Expedition to Tierra Nueva Richard Flint, Shirley Cushing Flint, 1997-09-15 In August 1992 a conference was held at New Mexico Highlands University to determine the exact route followed by Francisco Vazquez de Coronado's expedition to la Tierra Nueva a region stretching from modern Sonora to modern Kansas. Seventeen papers from that conference are supplemented by six more recent essays. Although there is some discussion of Coronado's trip up the west coast of Mexico the focus is on the route within the present boundaries of the US. Includes an historical introduction and 18 maps.
