The Limits of Love Gilbert Meilaender, 1987 Reflecting upon some problems of the moral life Gilbert Meilaender considers their difficulties within a vision that accentuates not only the limits but also the promise of the Christian story Created by God as finite beings we make particular attachments Redeemed by God for a community transcending nature and history our love always carries us beyond the special bonds of time and place We live therefore with a sense of permanent tension If this tension heightens our sense of the perplexities of life it should not free us from the obligation to probe clarify and where we can resolve some of those difficulties The author holds that theological ethics must clarify the direction for growth and development within the Christian life He undertakes such analysis emphasizing throughout the limits of the human condition the importance of our nature as embodied persons and the danger and pretension in some of our attempts to take control of and master human life This Christian vision is developed in chapters that explore a range of moral problems such as abortion artificial reproduction euthanasia care for defective infants provision of artificial nutrition and hydration and marital and political community These are throughout however theological explorations Taken together they illumine not only particular problems of the moral life but a vision of life classically Christian in its conception humane in its care for particular bonds of attachment and modest in its recognition of moral limits on our ability to seek the good Meilaender has developed a broad recognition both among scholars and students of ethics and among interested general readers He has the capacity to throw fresh angles of vision on complex problems so as to help both the sophisticated and the uninitiated reader to think more penetratingly about moral questions Making the Best of It
