Muriel Dimen, 1977 Europe in the Anthropological Imagination Susan Parman, 1998 Europe in the Anthropological Imagination is a provocative reflective book about how American anthropologists study Europe The book is composed of fourteen essays by twelve anthropologists who have worked in Europe for at least twenty years These anthropologists were asked to address how when where and why they began to study Europe and to consider what this implied for the development of anthropology in general since anthropology is traditionally identified as a field that studies the non western exotic Other Back cover A Passage to Anthropology Kirsten Hastrup, 2013-04-15 The postmodernist critique of

Objectivism Realism and Essentialism has somewhat shattered the foundations of anthropology seriously questioning the legitimacy of studying others By confronting the critique and turning it into a vital part of the anthropological debate A Passage to Anthropology provides a rigorous discussion of central theoretical problems in anthropology that will find a readership in the social sciences and the humanities It makes the case for a renewed and invigorated scholarly anthropology with extensive reference to recent anthropological debates in Europe and the US as well as to new developments in linguistic theory and especially newer American philosophy Although the style of the work is mainly theoretical the author illustrates the points by referring to her own fieldwork conducted in Iceland A Passage to Anthropology will be of interest to students in anthropology sociology and cultural studies Disgust and the Anthropological Imagination Deborah Durham, 2011

Professor Mark Harris,Professor Nigel Rapport,2015-04-28 In this innovative volume anthropologists turn their attention to a topic that has rarely figured as a focus of concerted investigation and yet which can be described as an intrinsic aspect of all human knowing and part of all processes by which human beings process information about themselves their identities their environments and their relations the imagination How do anthropologists use imagination in coming to know their research subjects How might they and how should they use their imagination And how do research subjects themselves understand describe justify and limit their use of the imagination Presenting a range of case studies from a variety of locations including the UK US Africa East Asia and South America this collection offers a comparative exploration of how imagination has been conceptualized and understood in a range of analytical traditions with regard to issues of both methodology and ethnomethodology With emphasis not on abstraction but on imagination as activity technique and subject situated in the middle of lives Reflections on Imagination sheds new light on imagination as a universal capacity and practice something to which human beings attend whenever they make sense of their environments and situate their life projects in these environments the means by which worlds come to be The Social Worlds of Higher Education Bernice Pescosolido,Ronald Aminzade,1999-03-22 This is the first comprehensive guide to teaching in the social sciences ever published Two complete works in one provides a survey of the larger institutional context and alternative perspectives on current debates in higher education as well as a comprehensive and practical guide to teaching Contains original essays by leading teachers and scholars including Craig Calhoun Teresa Sullivan Dean Dorn Paul Baker Charles Tilly Howard Aldrich Daniel Chambliss and Mary Romero The accompanying Fieldguide for Teaching includes an additional 80 articles excerpts teaching tips exercises checklists and overheads covering a complete spectrum of teaching concerns Writing the Other Amy F. Joseph Holt,2016 This project examines the origins and history of early anthropological thought in the philosophy of the Scottish Enlightenment during the last half of the eighteenth century The aim of this investigation is to set into historical context the intense interest in tribal societies exhibited in the writings of the leading members of the Scottish intelligentsia Increasing contact with and awareness of non European societies in the eighteenth century raised the problem of accounting for both the diversities and uniformities existing among the world's peoples and their societies. After midcentury many enlightened moral theorists drew upon the methods and epistemologies of the new natural sciences to reestablish the moral sciences on natural historical foundations. Human and social development were understood as analogous to generative theories posited in the vitalist life sciences of epigenesis which was instrumental most notably in the stadial or four stages theory of progress articulated by Adam Smith. Reinterpreting the Scottish Enlightenment in the context of vitalist thought offers greater insight into what is perhaps its preeminent idea: that of spontaneous order. The theorization of moral and social systems as products of human nature allowed for a far reaching revision of the human sciences and the systems of thought upon which they were based including natural law theory. The mainstream of anthropological theorists understood the continuities among human societies as evidence of a uniformity in human nature. A minority however located divergences in civilizational progress in racial difference. This study attempts to draw out the implications of these understandings of humanity and connections between empire and anthropology which were constitutive strands of the late eighteenth century Scottish human and moral sciences. Recognizing in British imperial and commercial expansion nascent processes of globalization, enlightened Scots made its theorization a part of the moral and human sciences. Smith posited that it was familiarity with others mediated through the imagination that produced sympathy. With increasing contact between unequal societies the more liberal Scottish theorists reasoned with savages sought in part to cultivate humanitarian and egalitarian sentiments towards them among their readers through the creation of an anthropological imagination.
